An Evening Echo.

Man can do everything with himself, but he must not attempt to do too much with others.—HUMBOLDT.

Consistent Inconsistencies.

A New Orleans newspaper correctly notes that of the minor aspects of the great European war, none, perhaps, is more curious and striking than the consistent inconsistency revealed in the policies and practices of the several belligerents.

Germany vigorously protests the landing on Chinese territory of Japanese troops sent against Kiao-Chau, calmly ignoring the fact that the Kaiser's armies, by their march through Belgium, furnished example and precedent for the Japanese step against which she protests.

Great Britain, denouncing the violation of Belgium's neutrality, carefully refrains from any remonstrance against the reported violation of China's neutrality. Again, Germany denounces Japan's entrance upon the conflict—and at the same time is urging Turkey to go in. The allies, defending Japan's course as a fulfillment of her relations with Britain, are striving to enlist the support of Italy in disregard of that nation's relations with the embattled Kaiser.

It is only fair to note, as the New Orleans newspaper points out, that the inconsistencies are not all upon one side. Everybody seems to be doing it, and in each case the inconsistency finds plenty of defenders outside as well as inside officialdom. Interested bystanders, in their judgment of these performances, usually are swayed by their sympathies.

Full Style Number.

This issue of the Daily Telegram, styled the Full Style Number, gives extraordinary service to its thousands and thousands of readers, and the Telegram feels assured the same is highly appreciated. It should prove of great value and helpfulness to men, women and children as it is a complete compendium containing up-to-date information concerning the latest fashions, comprehensive articles by established authorities appearing therein as well as much other useful information.

Harrison and adjoining counties all covered by the Daily Telegram are making great strides in the matter of modern living. Culture grows in them as days come, and the remark is common that no section of country has a better and more stylishly dressed population. In their thrift and progress the people of this section keep pace with the rest of the world in the matter of dress, a fact in which all take pride.

It is unquestioned that such a progressive people will appreciate this mammoth number of the Daily Telegram replete with detailed information designed to make them still more versatile in matters of dress and to aid them in right and correct choosing of wearing apparel as well as to bring to their attention the numerous opportunities and patronage here where they can do their buying and be assured of the latest, best and most fashionable. In rendering this assistance the Telegram takes infinite pleasure and it rests assured that efforts are not in vain.

Without further detail except to mention the fact that the present number consists of ten regular pages and twenty-eight special pages, it is more than last year, and that the Telegram is, it believes, the only newspaper in West Virginia that issues a Full Fashion Number and renders such valuable service in this line, the attention of its thousands and thousands of readers is respectfully directed to the special pages in particular. A careful reading of them is bound to prove profitable.

Petrograd.

While the most disadvantageously situated of all the capitals of Europe, indeed of the world, St. Petersburg still is a monument to the pride and energy of a notable historical figure, Peter the Great, the New York Times observes in giving a few interesting facts about the great city, which recently had its name changed to Petrograd. He wanted a European capital, says the Times, in order to signalize and immortalize his conquest. In 1703, when the first foundations of the city were laid on the marshy island on the delta of the Neva, at the eastern end of the Gulf of Finland, the surrounding territory had even then not been entirely conquered.

Peter went to work with his usual energy, and with his usual ruthlessness to create a capital in what was worse than a desert. He himself superintended the building of the city, and gave the direction of the details to half a dozen lieutenants. The work was pushed with almost incredible rapidity, so that by 1712 sufficient advance had been made to permit the transfer of the imperial family from Moscow.

One measure ordered by Peter was that thousands of peasants must settle in or near the new capital. A special tax was put on his empire to meet the expenses of building the city. Such a small difficulty as the discovery of a scarcity of masons was nothing to a man like Peter the Great—he simply forbade the erection of stone buildings anywhere else in the empire until St. Petersburg was finished.

His city built, the next step was to make a capital in fact as well as in name. The ingenious Peter ordered all Russians who owned over 500 serfs to build homes in St. Petersburg. Not only that, they were obliged to spend the winter season there.

During the reigns of Catherine I and Peter II the Russian population of the new capital decreased considerably. Anna Ivanovna revived many of the measures of Peter I, and Elizabeth Petrovna, following the policy of her predecessors, greatly increased the population of the city and added much to its architectural beauty. Catherine II (Catherine the Great), also took much interest in the growth of St. Petersburg and enriched it by many palaces, some of them intended for her favorites.

The Safety and Service of Banks.

"Depositors entrust banks with such power as they have today, and are unlikely to entrust that power to weak or evil hands.—H. P. Davidson, of P. Morran and Company.

The value to the business public of good banks can hardly be overestimated.

The financial lifeblood of the community flows through these arteries in the form of loans and discounts, exchanges, collections and other transactions.

To the bank the man of big affairs can come for consolation about transactions involving large amounts, while the man of small affairs with little knowledge of banking can turn to it for sound advice.

The banks help to keep the local wheels of trade and industry moving, tide honorable men over business depressions, keep local money at home and in a score of ways help the community. The distribution of interest on time or savings deposits, amounting to a large sum in the aggregate, is a strong incentive to thrift. As a teacher of a good business system, also, a well equipped bank is an excellent school for its depositors.

Several times a year, banks are thoroughly examined by representatives of the state or national banking authorities, as the case may be, and also by representatives of the board of directors.

The examiners count all the cash on hand down to the last penny, then check off all the bonds and other investment securities owned by the banks, as well as the collateral on which it has loaned money. They examine all the notes discounted, verify all balances due to and from other banks by obtaining from them a formal certifying as to balances.

Sometimes depositors upon being shown a bank's safe deposit vault, ask: "Is this the vault where my savings deposits are kept?" Some money is kept in a separate box till he calls for it.

Money kept that way, while it would be safe, would be doing neither its owner, the bank, nor the community any good. It would be hoarded merely and be entirely non-productive. As a matter of fact a certain proportion of depositors' funds must be kept in reserve, but some of this reserve may be deposited at interest in other banks. But the largest part of deposit money is invested by the bank, under strict legal safeguards in various conservative ways, usually in demand and short term investments that render the assets of the bank quick to realize upon when necessary.

A bank must use the greatest discrimination in making loans. A stranger cannot expect accommodations. It is customary for the borrower to make a periodical statement of his financial affairs, which is kept in the bank's records.

Naturally, in their dealings with regular depositors, the bank's officers become well acquainted with their character and their resources and are thus in a position to determine to how large a line of credit each one is entitled. The ability to borrow money from the bank is one of the great advantages of being a steady bank depositor.

WHAT OTHER EDITORS SAY

Bound to Come.

It was evident from the beginning that Germany would lose out in the European war, but it was scarcely anticipated this would occur so soon.—Parkersburg State Journal.

A Shame.

It is a shame to have the National League pennant race—the proudest we have ever seen—practically wrecked as the result of the preponderance of the war news.—Parkersburg Dispatch-News.

They Have.

For many a home, in the heat of the efforts of the Democrats to lower the cost of living, they have evaporated much of the sweetness—sugar, for instance.—Weston Independent.

Poor Old Vic.

Poor old Vic Huerfano started to Paris and when he reached London war broke out. He may yet be driven back to the United States. And if he comes here he may be forced to salute.—Wheeling Register.

Dead.

THE DAILY NOVELETTE

BOOMING BUSINESS.

His weary way he wended; His journey now was ended; No welcome had he in the town, No one to greet him of renown.

The traveler, pale of face and weak of legs, limped into Skagport on his crutches.

Plainly he had not long to live. "How like life!" he mused. "I, an old broken man, enter the town that is to hold my weary frame until I die, and there is not a soul to greet me and say somebody is glad of my coming. Old men are not wanted in this world!"

But as he stood on Main street, unnoticed by the crowds of folk hurrying by intent on their own business, a tall, hospitable looking man in a high hat came striding toward him and grasped his hand so earnestly that the traveler was almost thrown from his crutches.

"Welcome!" cried the tall man. "Whatever your name be, welcome! Welcome to Skagport, and may you continue to abide here until the Grim Reaper reaps you hence. Sir, I am glad you have come, and I shall see you again. I shall see you again."

Once more, welcome. Sir, my hand—

And he banded the traveler. His card and strode on his way, leaving the ancient traveler cheered and warmed within. He glanced at the card and read: Billings Gangway, Undertaker.

PLAY IS FREE TO CRIPPLES

Star of "Neptune's Daughter" Was One Herself Once But Swimming Cured Her.

When Annette Kellerman, the "Diving Venus," who is the star of the wonderful photoplay, "Neptune's Daughter," now showing at the Robinson Grand, was a little girl she was a cripple. Through swimming exercises she was cured of her deformity, and became one of the most perfectly formed women in the entire world. Ever since she has had a soft spot in her heart for all crippled or deformed children, and it is in keeping with Miss Kellerman's wishes that the management of the pictures extend an invitation to all crippled or deformed children of Clarksburg and vicinity to attend the matinee Friday, September 11, at 2:30 o'clock. The best seats in the house will be reserved for the unfortunate children absolutely free of charge. Anyone knowing children afflicted in an way will confer a favor on the management of the theater by conveying this invitation to such children.

The praise and commendation of this sensational photo film drunk by those who have already seen it is boundless. It is the most spectacular and gripping production that has ever been shown to a Clarksburg audience, and although it is a story of Make Believe Land it is one particularly appealing to children and has many scenes and situations that thrill to the uttermost degree. They make the enraptured spectators hold their breath in sheer suspense and forget for the moment that they are not actually witnessing a scene from real life. The stirring happenings follow in rapid sequence. The back ground consists of the water, caves, grottoes, oyster bordered paths and lily covered fields of the beautiful Bermuda islands.

WHEELING, Sept. 10.—Cold weather kept Wednesday's attendance at the West Virginia State Fair down.

The racing was good. Four of the five event son the card were finished, and the 2:24 trot was postponed until Thursday. Baby E took two heats easily in the 2:19 pace, but the judges declared all bets on the heat-off, besides finding Guy Rea, owner and driver of Baby E, $50, and reserving the right to further punish him.
